The terms "civil war" and "revolution" refer to conflict situations and internal turmoil within a given country. While there are some similarities between the two concepts, we cannot overlook some key differences that prevent us from interchanging the terms.

Difference Between Civil War and Revolution

Effects after the war. The perception that was generally held before the war was that women were less competent than men. While some women actually worked before the major wars, they usually came from minority groups or among the poor – the middle class woman was destined to be a housewife.
