A computer mouse is a hand-held pointing device that detects two-dimensional motion relative to a surface. This motion is typically translated into the motion of a pointer on a display, which allows a smooth control of the graphical user interface. The first public demonstration of a mouse controlling a computer system was in 1968.

The simple answer is no—you cannot patent an idea for an invention. The invention itself has to be produced or a patent application containing the invention must be filed with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO).

Can You Patent an Idea? | LegalZoom

How much does it cost to patent an idea? This is a critical question when you're starting the patent application process. The cost to apply for a patent is only part of the total patent fees that inventors must consider: revising, prosecuting, issuing and maintaining a patent all add to the cost. You can do a lot to keep the cost to file a patent down and much of it you can do before you ever ...
